

Introduction

Wednesday, 28 January 2009 - Last Updated Monday, 13 April 2009

If you are a newly designated Federal depository library coordinator, the U.S. Government Printing Office (GPO) would like to welcome you to the Federal Depository Library Program (FDLP).

If you are already familiar with the FDLP from previous roles, GPO appreciates your continued support of the FDLP.

If you have any questions about the FDLP, please feel free to contact GPO. As the FDLP functions best as a system of cooperating libraries, you are also always encouraged to communicate regularly with the personnel at your regional library and at neighboring libraries. Your regional librarian will provide continuing support to your depository library.

The FDLP was established to ensure free public access to information products and services of the Federal government. By reviewing the New Depository Coordinators tutorial articles, you will be better prepared to engage in depository management responsibilities within your library and also to contribute to the partnership of Federal depository libraries and GPO.